Director's Message

Dear Friends,

In today's fast-evolving job market, the terms skill and competency are often used interchangeably, but they have distinct meanings. Skills refer to specific abilities that an individual acquires through training, education, or practice. Examples include programming, graphic design, and data analysis. Skills are task-oriented and can often be measured or tested.

On the other hand, competencies are broader and include a combination of skills, knowledge, attitudes, and behaviors required for success in a role. For instance, leadership competency includes skills such as communication, decision-making, and emotional intelligence. Competencies define how effectively an individual applies their skills in real-world situations.

While skills can be developed in a short time, competencies require experience and application over time. For example, a person may have strong presentation skills but needs competency in public speaking to engage and influence an audience effectively.

Employers value competencies because they determine workplace success and adaptability. A skilled worker knows what to do, but a competent worker understands how to do it effectively in various contexts.

To excel in any profession, individuals must develop both skills and competencies, ensuring not just efficiency but also long-term career growth.

Warm regards,

Fr. Joe anand SDB
